Introduction

Welcome to this History SA Bibliography of Eyre Peninsula, South Australia; covering the area bounded by Whyalla in the east, the Gawler Ranges in the north, and Penong in the west.

Who is it for?

The bibliography is a resource for those with a personal or academic interest in the historical, social, political and economic life and the physical environment of Aboriginal and settler communities of the Peninsula. It is relevant to researchers from a variety of backgrounds and disciplines.

It provides a range of material to inform newcomers and more experienced readers, to guide them to additional sources, and to assist them in their research.

What's included?

The bibliography contains published and unpublished works and archival material. Works of fiction and non-fiction; manuscripts; maps; oral histories; newspapers; photographs; state and local government records; and government publications are included.

References are predominantly sourced from the State Library of South Australia; State Records of South Australia; the South Australian Museum Archives; the Mitchell Library; and the National Library of Australia. They are extensive, but by no means exhaustive.

Descriptions of items are taken largely verbatim from the relevant library or archive catalogue from which the individual reference was obtained. We wish to acknowledge the library/archive authorship of these very useful descriptions.

Using the bibliography

Reference items are organised into sections by subject matter. Sections are listed in the contents pages.

There is some unavoidable overlap between sections. Therefore, it may be necessary to look at several sections in order to obtain all relevant references on your research topic. For example, an interest in fishing will generate most references if sections on both 'Fishing' and 'Shipping' are searched. References relating to agriculture can be found under both 'Agriculture' and 'Biography/Autobiography/Genealogy', and so on.

SLSA: OH 1/4, Interview with Anne Angela Liddy. Interviewer Beth M. Robertson, 1985.

Anne Liddy was born in Dawson into an Irish Catholic family 'with a genius for going to dry places where they don't make any money' (preliminary interview). In 1904 three generations of the family joined the exodus from the Upper North and became part of the 'second settlement' of Eyre Peninsula, taking up virgin scrub at Yallunda Flat near Tumbay Bay. Anne Liddy left the Yalunda Flat School in 1914, the year that the family farm went bankrupt and her father became a railway ganger. Her first job, for six years, was as domestic and mother's helper for the family of the Tumbay Bay Bank of Adelaide manager. After returning to help on her family's new share farm venture, she began nursing training at the Tumbay Bay Hospital in 1923, recognising this as one of the very limited employment alternatives for local girls. Miss Liddy finished training at the Adelaide Hospital and began her career as a private nurse with the Royal British Nurses' Association in 1927.

SLSA: OH 141, Interview with Norman Lindsay Haines. Interviewer Elizabeth Elix, 1991.

Norman Lindsay Haines was born in 1907 in Port Pirie. After early years at Cowell he grew up on a farm at Nelshaby, leaving it in 1924 to go to Adelaide Teachers' College. His career in the Education Department spanned forty-nine years, broken only by service as a meteorologist in the RAAF during the war. When Mr Haines retired as a Senior Education Officer, he returned to the farm, with his wife Betty, to restore it to its full potential. In the first part of the interview he describes life growing up on the farm in the upper north as one of four boisterous brothers; friends and neighbours in the region of Nelshaby; and parental pressure on him and his brothers to achieve a secondary education. In the second part, Mr Haines recalls aspects of his early years to the age of 10 at the family's first farm at Cowell where conditions were hard and children died of diphtheria and meningitis, and goes on to describe the family's move to Nelshaby. In the third part of the interview Mr Haines recounts aspects of his father's history, explaining how he worked in the Port Pirie smelters to earn the money to go on the land at Cowell. He also recounts his parents' courtship and early married life culminating in the move to Cowell.

SLSA: OH 169/1, Interview with Harold Marlow. Interviewer Tony Evans, 1992.

Part of Series: Barwell Boys Oral Histories.

Harold Marlow was born in Wiltshire, England. He came to South Australia in 1924 aged 16 and fulfilled his labouring agreement working on a farm at Minnipa on Eyre Peninsula. The detailed interview tells of Harold's teenage experience as a Barwell Boy in the context of his life story: his childhood in London, his own farming ventures in South Australia, Second World War service in the Royal Australian Airforce, work in suburban post offices and retirement at Port Vincent.

SLSA: OH 169/2, Interview with Taffy Drew. Interviewer Tony Evans, 1993.

Part of Series: Barwell Boys Oral Histories.

Taffy Drew was born in Wiltshire, England. He came to South Australia in 1923 aged 18 and fulfilled his labouring agreement working on a farm at Haslam. Taffy settled happily and rapidly into the life on Eyre Peninsula and stayed on in the region as a farmer, marrying a local girl, Jessica Dunn.

SLSA: OH 169/3, Interview with Dick Judd. Interviewer Tony Evans, 1993.

Part of Series: Barwell Boys Oral Histories.

Dick Judd was born in Shropshire, England. He came to South Australia in 1923 aged 16 and fulfilled part of his labouring agreement working on farms near Edithburgh and Coobowie. He also worked in the region as a stone and salt carter and proceeded to various labouring and droving jobs on Eyre Peninsula and in the Upper and Far North. Dick then worked on stations in New South Wales for thirty years, broken by his war service overseas. In 1968 the family sold up at Menindie and moved to South Australia where Dick continued to farm.

SLSA: OH 326/13, Interview with Martha Kernich. Interviewer Neil Baron, 1994

Part of Series: Perceptions Of Lifestyle And Leisure Of Rural Women In South Australia 1940-1960.

Martha Kernich, nee Scherer, was born at Cambrai, South Australia, the daughter of a Lutheran minister and one of 11 children. When she was 18 she moved to Adelaide to enter domestic service, first at Immanuel College and then private homes until she married her sister in law's brother in 1942. They moved onto his family's farm on Eyre Peninsula. Martha and her husband had three sons and a daughter and Martha became involved in the local branch of the Country Women's Association and in exhibiting at local shows

SLSA: OH 326/14, Interview with Esma Trigg, interviewer Neil Barron, 1994.

Part of Series: Perceptions Of Lifestyle And Leisure Of Rural Women In South Australia 1940-1960.

Esma Trigg, nee Haines, was born at Cowell, South Australia. Her father was a returned serviceman with a nervous condition and the family struggled to make ends meet living in rented houses in the region, settling in Cummins in 1936. Esma was disappointed not to be able to go to high school and worked in local shops and offices until three years after her marriage, in 1943, to a local farmer's son. After the war they bought part of his family's property to start their own farm which they worked for 10 years before his health broke down. They moved back into Cummins in 1957, and to Adelaide in 1963 when an attractive job opportunity arose.

SLSA: OH 326/22, Interview with Win Standing. Interviewer Neil Barron, 1994.

Part of Series: Perceptions Of Lifestyle And Leisure Of Rural Women In South Australia 1940-1960.

Win Standing, nee Boehm, was born at Port Lincoln, South Australia, where her father was a builder. For eight years during Win's teens the family worked a property at Wharminda on the west coast of Eyre Peninsula, before returning to Port Lincoln in 1938 when Win's brothers were old enough to help in the building trade. She lived at home with her parents until her marriage in 1944, earning money by her dressmaking skills. Win discusses her perceptions of social strata in country towns, particularly in relation to local dances. Win had met her future husband at Wharminda and they corresponded during his overseas service. They lived in Port Lincoln until 1958.

SLSA: OH 326/34, Interview with Val Becker. Interviewer: Neil Baron, 1994.

Part of Series: Perceptions Of Lifestyle And Leisure Of Rural Women In South Australia 1940-1960.

Val Becker, nee Dolling, was born at Cleve, on South Australia's Eyre Peninsula where she grew up on her family's farm. She attended the local Cockabidnie school and then boarded for three years at Kadina to attend high school. Val was keen to train as a teacher and at the age of sixteen began work as a junior teacher at Poonindie while she waited to attend the Adelaide Teachers' College. After graduating her next post was at Yabmana where she was the last teacher before it closed. From there she was transferred to Nangawarry in the South East and then to Mount Hill back on Eyre Peninsula. Val had to resign from teaching when she married in 1949 and she was delighted to return to the South East where her husband had found work on the Myora pine plantation. After four years they returned to her family's property at Cockabidnie to share farm but the venture was not a success and in 1958 they moved back to the South East.

SLSA: OH 593/8, Interview with Moira Shannon, interviewer Sue Anderson, 2001.

Moira Shannon was born in Hindmarsh, a suburb of Adelaide, in 1932. When she was 12 years old, she moved with her family to Port Lincoln on Eyre Peninsula where she has lived ever since. In 1993, Moira Shannon was awarded an Order of Australia Medal for her extensive community work, in particular the establishment of the first Women's Shelter at Port Lincoln in 1978. In a moving and remarkably frank account, Moira told the personal story behind her establishment of the Women's Shelter in Port Lincoln.

SLSA: PRG 458, Percy John Baillie, ca. 1890-1990.

SLSA: OH 1/39, Interview with Garnet James Lord. Interviewer Beth M. Robertson, 1986.

Garnet Lord was born in Delamere where his father managed the local store before turning to mixed farming and butchering after the Great War. Before he turned six Garnet began at the Delamere school. A love of books and admiration for a teacher led Garnet to talk about becoming a teacher, an ambition that his parents supported. He went to Adelaide High School in 1920 and on to the Adelaide Teachers' College in 1924. His first appointment was to the one teacher school at Pygery, Eyre Peninsula, and the Education Department fostered young love by appointing his girl friend, Ella Parsons, to Wudinna East, just down the railway line. The following year, 1927, they were both appointed to suburban schools and married. Mr Lord was at Rose Park for fifteen years before serving at various suburban schools.

Ted Gare attended Watervale School and Unley High School. Ethyl Stewart attended Goolwa School. Both Mrs Stewart and Mr Gare completed their teacher training at Adelaide Teachers' College in the late 1920s to early 1930s. Their first teaching appointments were at one-teacher schools on Eyre Peninsula. They speak of their primary and secondary schooling including teachers, subjects and lessons, sport, discipline, examinations and school facilities. Mrs Stewart and Mr Gare also speak of their student days at college and recall the subjects they studied, the social life, dress requirements, student assessment and formal terms of address between student and lecturer. In addition Mrs Stewart and Mr Gare talk of their first teaching appointments; commenting on the isolation, the school inspectors' control over the curriculum and teacher promotions, and the teachers' standing in the small communities.

SLSA: OH 146/1, Interview with Ross Haldane, Interviewer: Jack Darcey, 1990.

Part of Series: Oral History of the Australian Fishing Industry: South Australian Interviews.

The following is taken from the introduction to the interview provided by the interviewer: Ross Haldane is a member of a prominent fishing family in Port Lincoln. His father and uncles and their families came from Victoria on the vessel they themselves had built and initiated the tuna fishery out of Port Lincoln. Ross became an architect but also has had first hand experience as a fisherman. He has retained his involvement with the family fishing interests and is secretary of an influential organisation in the South Australian fishing industry. On this tape which ranges over many of the fisheries in South Australia he refers particularly to fishing out of Port Lincoln and especially to the tuna and prawning industries. He also discusses the economics and management of fishing as well.

SLSA: OH 146/4, Interview with Thomas Edward Holder, Interviewer Jack Darcey, 1990.

Part of Series: Oral History of the Australian Fishing Industry: South Australian Interviews.

The following is taken from the introduction to the interview provided by the interviewer: Tom Holder has been engaged in various forms of fishing in South Australia for some twenty odd years. He is a pioneer of the west coast prawning industry and currently operates one of the three trawlers working in that fishery. Mr Holder raises a number of issues of widespread interest and consequence in the fishing industry. These include management of the industry, licences and their transferability, employment of labour, prices and markets. With several sons also involved in fishing it is clear that Mr Holder and his family have a very considerable stake in the industry.

SLSA: OH 146/6, Interview with Robert Allan Britcher. Interviewer Jack Darcey, 1990.

Part of Series: Oral History of the Australian Fishing Industry: South Australian Interviews.

The following is taken from the introduction to the interview provided by the interviewer: Bob Britcher is part-owner and operator of the prawn trawler 'Nenad' working in Spencer Gulf out of Port Lincoln. Mr Britcher worked as a deckhand and abalone diver before becoming the skipper of the vessel he was eventually to own in partnership. As he relates on the tape, the prawn fishery has been good to him but it is also the case that he recognises its value and adopts a responsible attitude to the industry. He plays an active part in its management. He speaks of the operation of prawning, its techniques and methods and the marketing and management, as well as some of the controversies and problems that attend it.

SLSA: OH 146/7, Interview with Barry Robert Schultz. Interviewer: Jack Darcey, 1990.

Part of Series: Oral History of the Australian Fishing Industry: South Australian Interviews.

The following is taken from the introduction to the interview provided by the interviewer: Barry Schultz is a prominent business and professional man in Port Lincoln. He has close ties with fishing and serves on both local and national bodies in the industry. The interview focuses on the tuna fishing at Port Lincoln which is the main Australian port for this activity. Mr Schultz discusses the management of the industry and methods used in catching, transporting and marketing the product. He also discusses the role of overseas interests in the industry, the training and employment of personnel and some of the problems facing the industry as well as its prospects for the future.

SLSA: OH 146/9, Interview with Gunnar Jensen, Interviewer: Jack Darcey, 1990.

The following is taken from the introduction to the interview provided by the interviewer: Gunnar Jensen was a seafarer on a Danish vessel before entering Australia and eventually being granted permanent resident status. He came to Port Lincoln and worked as a deckhand before acquiring his own fishing boat. He has in turn been shark fishing, rock lobster fishing, tuna fishing, prawning and again rock lobster fishing and has worked in other states as well as in South Australia. Mr Jensen has been active in fishermen's organisations, on advisory committees and in establishing sea rescue facilities. He has also been involved in processing.

SLSA: OH 17/18, Interview with Judith Wotherspoon. Interviewer Joan Durdin, 1988.

Part of Series: History of Nursing in South Australia.

Judith Wotherspoon was born in Melbourne and came to Adelaide with her parents at the age of eight. She was educated at the Presbyterian Girl's College, and began nursing training at St Andrews' Presbyterian Hospital in 1962. On completion of training she worked at Cowell on Eyre Peninsula, and then trained as a midwife at the Crown Street Women's Hospital, Sydney. After nursing in Papua New Guinea, Britain and Canada, Judith studied at Flinders University for a Bachelor of Arts degree. Subsequently she worked in the field of community health and as a part-time lecturer at Sturt College. Between 1982 and 1985 she was senior lecturer in nursing at the Darwin Community College, then went to the University of NSW to complete a masters degree in health planning. At the time of the interview Judith was about to take up an appointment as lecturer in nursing at the South Australian Institute of Technology

SLSA: OH 17/43, Interview with Mary Wallace and Agnes Beevers. Interviewer Joan Durdin, 1984.

Part of Series: History of Nursing in South Australia.

Mary Wallace and her sister Agnes Beevers were born at Jamestown, South Australia where they began nursing training in 1926. They completed their training at the Adelaide Hospital, and later did midwifery. Subsequently both women were matrons in country hospitals on Eyre Peninsula, Mary at Kimba and Agnes at Wudinna. Agnes married but Mary continued nursing until her retirement in 1963

SLSA: OH 26.18, Radio interview with Dorothy Sorby Adams. Interviewer Lynne Arnold, 1969.

The opening announcement for this broadcast includes the following information: 'Our guest this morning is a well known member of the medical profession, Dr Dorothy Sorby Adams. Though Dr Adams discounts the suggestion that she was in any way a pioneer doctor, she nevertheless was among the earliest members of her sex to work as a General Practitioner in a South Australian country district. Her girlhood was spent in Jamestown, though she was born in England, and she graduated in Medicine from the University of Adelaide in 1922. After a term as a Medical Officer with the State Education Department, Dr Adams went to Dublin to do post-graduate work in Midwifery, and then came back to South Australia, and set up practice in Kimba. Here she remained for twelve years, moving to Adelaide in 1940, where she practised until her retirement five years ago. Apart from her medical activities, Dr Adams has been closely associated with the South Australian League of Women Voters, of which she is a Past President, and she is currently President of the Australian Federation of Women Voters.'

SLSA: OH 143, Women's Experience of Abortion in the Upper Spencer Gulf Region, South Australia, 1986-1991. Interviewer: Jan Melanie, 1991.

A series of ten interviews with women, doctors and other health care workers concerning the provision of abortion services in the Upper Spencer Gulf region, including the cities of Port Pirie, Port Augusta and Whyalla, 1986-1991. The interviews are part of a project, which included an analysis of relevant health literature, funded by the Australian Research Council to provide information for the development of an effective public health care policy for women. Most of the interviewees are identified by pseudonyms. The project was conducted in conjunction with the one described at OH 152.

Anne Payne, nee Kaehne, was born in Jamestown, South Australia and her daughter Val Kretschmer, nee Payne, was born at Wallaroo. Due to her mother's ill health, Anne was brought up by relatives in various country centres. She married a postal clerk, Darcy Payne, in 1928 and they had three daughters who were raised at Ceduna. During the family's years there, Anne established a hairdressing business. After three years of high school, Val worked at a local bank until the family moved to Adelaide in the late 1940s. Both recall the years at Ceduna with pleasure.

James Spitzkowsky was born in Newcastle, New South Wales, and settled in Penong in South Australia in the late 1970s after working with camels in Central Australia for several years. He runs fifteen camels used for his ecotourism safaris on nine and a half thousand acres of scrub which previously stocked sheep. He explains the scope of his safaris along the coast and in the Gawler Ranges. He speaks at some length about pollution from rubbish disposal by surfers, fishermen and Aborigines, and the damage to wildlife by dogs. 'Spitta' holds miscellaneous leases for his property which are about to run out and not be renewed due to the proximity of the Chadinga Conservation Park. He describes his arguments for having this decision changed. He describes other interests, such as promoting the commercial farming of native vegetation and animals.
